

What does NDRC & Nea's energy reform mean for investors?

The reform aims to enhance competition but raises uncertainty over future returns for investors. China's National Development and Reform Commission (NDRC) and the National Energy Administration (NEA) have issued a directive to accelerate market-based pricing for renewable energy, including wind and solar power.

What is the National Development & Reform Commission?

The National Development and Reform Commission has been entrusted by the State Council to submit this report on the implementation of the 2023 plan and on the 2024 draft plan for national economic and social development to the Second Session of the 14th National People's Congress (NPC) for deliberation and approval.

What is a national development plan?

It seeks to coordinate measures to improve national energy security and achieve carbon peaking by 2030 and carbon neutrality by 2060 to ensure a high-quality economic and social development. It adheres to the national people-entered development philosophy.

What is NDRC & Nea energy plan?

The plan clearly states that energy authorities of provinces (autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the Central Government) must implement the requirements of this plan, compile regulatory capacity construction plans for their respective regions, and submit them to the NDRC and NEA before the end of June 2025.

What does the green energy plan mean for developing countries?

It also reasserts the regulating role of coal and the goal of boosting national production of natural gas. It enshrines into national policy the goal of supporting developing countries with green energy while not supporting any new overseas coal power projects. The plan calls for a speed up of the adjustment of the energy sector. It seeks to:
